

THE BRAIN ROT OF CIVILIZATIONS

Antisemitism functions like a disease of the mind.

It replaces evidence with conspiracy.

It replaces responsibility with blame.

It replaces solutions with hatred.

Once a society begins organizing itself around fantasies of Jewish power, Jewish control, or Jewish guilt, it loses the ability to understand reality.

And a society disconnected from reality cannot solve its problems.

THE LESSON

Antisemitism is dangerous to Jews.

But it is also dangerous to everyone else.

A society that obsesses over Jews is often a society that has stopped confronting itself.

The appearance of antisemitism should not only alarm Jews.

It should alarm anyone who cares about the health of their civilization.

The rise of antisemitism is not the beginning of a society's sickness.

It is often the sign that the sickness is already advanced.

WHEN A SOCIETY STOPS SOLVING PROBLEMS AND STARTS BLAMING JEWS, DECLINE HAS ALREADY BEGUN.

THE OLDEST SCAPEGOAT

Throughout history, societies facing crisis have often turned to the same target.

The Jew.

When economies failed, Jews were blamed.

When disease spread, Jews were blamed.

When governments became corrupt, Jews were blamed.

When wars were lost, Jews were blamed.

The accusation changed.
The scapegoat remained.

ANTISEMITISM IS A SYMPTOM

Antisemitism rarely appears during periods of confidence and stability.

It flourishes during periods of fear.

When institutions lose trust.

When citizens lose hope.

When people become desperate for simple answers to complicated problems.

Rather than confronting reality, societies look for someone to blame. Jews become the convenient answer.

HISTORY'S WARNING

Ancient Rome.

Medieval Europe.

Tsarist Russia.

Nazi Germany.

The Soviet Union.

Each was different.

Each had unique problems.

Yet all embraced anti-Jewish hatred.

Antisemitism did not save them.

It distracted them from the forces destroying them.
